	Coaching Philosophy
I believe in having a team that is competitive without being all consuming. I want to help the players continue to develop their soccer skills by pushing them without having them burn out. I hold regular, challenging practices, and find ways to develop the players' soccer skills and knowledge. The most important thing for players to learn is the right way to play. Accordingly, I develop practice plans that work on fundamental skills that should make playing soccer seem easier starting now and on up to any future level of play. These fundamentals are learned at practice through drills and mini games. Players are expected to be committed and participate in practices and games. Coaches are equally committed. In the end, I want it to be a game that players will enjoy for the rest of their lives.
